Superintendent's Report.

Derry has been very fortunate the past year in having an unusual number of bright, wide-awake teachers, under whose care the scholars have improved in every way. It may be regarded as a step in the right direction that our best teachers have not confined themselves to text books, but have taken every opportunity to develop the thinking powers of their pupils, who have been taught to reason for themselves instead of accepting passively whatever their books might say. They have also been encouraged to bring in facts gathered from their outside reading, and to find answers to questions of general interest, proposed by the teacher.

In some of the schools the children have been regularly and systematically taught to write stories, short essays, and letters. Many of these articles, written by very young pupils, would do credit to persons of mature years.

The important subject of spelling has received a new impetus by the substitution of Harrington's Graded Spelling-book for that of Worcester, with its long columns of difficult, and often,
